What are 4 Player Games?

This category presented to you right now strays away from single-player campaigns where you have to follow a set story arc or structure, where your fate is predetermined and you have to go through the motions set by the developers to reach the end goal because most of the entries you will find on this page have a goal at their center, and players get together to either work with one another to achieve it or duel with one another to come on top as the winner!

To highlight the teamwork aspect of this category, we have games such as Zombie Parade Defense and its many sequels, where each player assumes the role of a soldier tasked with saving humanity from zombies, as all of you have your own roles to shoot down the zombies attacking your base, each at your own station.

If one link is weak, zombies overtake you and the human race is screwed!

On the other side, it can be even more exciting to compete against one another, fighting one another to be declared victorious at the end, no matter in what kind of activity, where you try to show you are better than the other players.

Board Games : In acclaimed games such as UNO, Monopoly, Chess, Goose Game, Snake and Ladders, and others, you have to combine your luck with your strategies to overcome the others, using pieces on a board attributed to each of you, playing cards, dice, and more!

Conversely it's also beneficial to look at the away team's away run performances and their form at the same time.

Generally if the win percentage of the home team is higher, it's recommended that you bet 1 (home win), and if the away team is better, then 2 (away win).

FootyStats helps you find accurate 1x2 opportunities by showing you the home team's win percentage, as well as the away team's win percentage.

The stats are divided into each team's home and away forms respectively, so you can gauge their performances in context.

Points per game of each team is also a reasonable measure of how the team performs at each venue since points per game takes into account draws (or, X in t) Tj T* BT
