The new app Temu causes many mixed reactions.

The logo for the Temu money-making app.

“It’s like a regular shopping app like Amazon,” freshman Jamaal Caldwell said.

The way it works is the person who uses Temu will send you a text with a link that prompts you to download the app and from there you sign up. Once you sign up the person that sent you the link receives money on the app.

Caldwell has been able to purchase and receive foam runners from the website using the Temu money.

But this still doesn’t address people’s concerns. Some of the people who have bought things on Temu aren’t receiving their packages or aren’t receiving the money that has been promised.

Staleira had tried to redeem the free money that Temu promises to her CashApp and wasn’t able to which a lot of people have experienced. The majority of Better Business Bureaus complaints focus on money and packages not being delivered. Along with this most students at Lakewood High School aren’t spending the money they are redeeming but still have plans to.
