The problem is, though, as of this writing, about half of Visa and Mastercard transactions are declined because the credit card issuers, including many large banks, simply won't process gambling transactions, according to Gambling. Gambling is specifically listed in the fine print of some credit card agreements as a form of a cash advance or cash equivalent.

Cash advance fee: This is a one-time fee charged when you take your advance, usually 3% to 5% of the amount.

AmEx Pay Over Time restrictions.

Specifically for American Express cards, gambling-related purchases are disqualified for Pay Over Time, a feature that makes your American Express card function more like a traditional credit card, allowing you to finance qualifying purchases with interest.

Living through a pandemic might speed that process, Ambrogio says.

Is it a good idea to use a credit card to gamble? As with all credit card purchases, you should be aware of overspending.

“Each type of payment used for gambling - from cash to credit cards to PayPal - can impact how quickly and easily individuals may access more money, how much they can obtain at a time, and add additional costs, such as ATM fees or interest charges,” the council said in a news release.
