In an era when just about anything is at your fingertips when you reach for your cell phone in your pocket or handbag, it pays to know that online gambling laws are different and can be confusing when compared with other countries. In a country where families watch the winning numbers of the multi-million-dollar Lotto roll out live on national TV from the comfort of their lounge on Saturday nights, New Zealand children are exposed to the thrills of gambling at an early age.

It's usual for some operators to offer players free games.

They reserve the right not to pay out any wins to any ineligible individual who infiltrates their platform.

In New Zealand, the penalties for anyone taking part in unauthorised gambling are clearly outlined.

Fines of up to $50,000 can be imposed on organisations and up to $10,000 for individuals.

To show it means business, the Department of Internal Affairs prosecuted an Auckland man, An Yi Lin, for $NZ12,000 plus costs on August 30, 2004, for operating an illegal casino.

It includes regulating internet gambling.

Secondly, Spotify pay royalties to the rightholders of the song played.
