YT had listed a beautiful Valentino bag for sale on eBay. She said she was contacted by an eBay user/buyer who loved the bag and had a few questions. YT said she and the buyer had great conversations/messages via eBay's messaging system and came to an agreement on a price. The buyer then purchased the bag.

Upon her return, she found an email from Paypal stating the buyer was disputing the purchase via Paypal claiming she had not made the purchase. Scammers know they are protected via Paypal, so when they dispute a charge PayPal pulls the funds back out of the seller's account. I guess if the funds have been withdrawn, maybe they charge the seller's credit card...not sure how that works.

I finally decided I would take a chance and list two items I had rarely ever worn and had been thinking of selling: a pair of designer earrings and a pair of designer shoes I'd only worn 2-3 times. Both were still in excellent condition but had just not worked out for me for various reasons.
