A woman has shared a picture of the bag, which was bought by a shopper who was shocked when she saw the unfolded.

The bag was left outside a local pub and was immediately pulled. The woman's family said she was very, very shocked after the bag was discovered and is sitting next to her daughter in the back of a shop.

Police said the bag was a shelter bag made from cardboard. Police have said they are looking into the circumstances surrounding the incident.

Police said that the bag is not being sold in the street. 30pm.

A statement said the family is very concerned. People want validation before purchasing, and the best way to make that decision is on the front of the product page: reviews.

I have found, after running over two dozen book launches, that the most effective way to get reviews fast on launch is through setting up a launch team.

6. Day 3: Reminder email. I wait 3 days and send out a reminder email. In this email I thank everyone who has left a review and thank people in advance who are still working on the book and haven't posted yet.

8. Contact Your List: If you have a list, this is gold for getting paid downloads and possible reviews. You should contact your list on the first day the book is live and let people know that the book has just launched. Then, several days later, email them again asking if they had a chance to get into the material. You could add something of value here just to show subscribers how much you value their support. This is the email where I include a "leave a review" invite.

If you can get 20+ reviews on launch after one week you are looking very good. This is enough to get momentum moving and the Amazon algorithm will see that your book is doing well.

Check out the Amazon Top Customer Reviewers list. This is a time-consuming process but, if you can get 2-3 reviewers to agree to a book review, you're all set.
