A bookie is someone who facilitates gambling by setting odds, accepting and plac ing bets, and then paying out the winnings.
Bookies were more popular prior to the internet explosion because they could ta ke bets in person or over the phone, often illegally.
Bookmakers don't bet themselves, as they make money from charging a vigorish
, or a transaction fee.
The biggest role for bookmakers is to set the odds, often using calculations fr om a variety of sources, in order to receive equal money on both sides of a bet.
While that may never be possible, it's best for the bookie to get equal mone y on each side because that leads to a higher probability of them winning money.
If the money is balanced and there is 50% of bets on each side, the bookie earn
