The company announced a new and slightly controversial policy in 2016. Under the new terms, all salaried employees now receive extra pay for working more than forty hours per week.

Work harder for the same pay?

Under the new regulations, all employees who receive a fixed salary are required to work extra hours. This applied to both full-time and part-time employees in all divisions of the company; to receive extra pay for additional work, employees have to earn less than $50,440 per year. This requirement has been raised from the previous requirement, where employees had to earn less than $47,476 per year.
