Ask any fan of casino slot machines which they'd prefer, and every single one would rather see their luck running hot rather than cold.

Maybe that's why so many games at online casinos use fire as either a primary or secondary theme: we all know how great it is to feel like you're on fire and simply can't lose.

While we haven't seen a final version, all indications are that the game will use the same basic look and format as the original Burning Hot machine.

They also provide free slots versions of all their games, so you'll be able to test this one out before you risk any real cash.

In addition, their software is offered in a browser-based, no download needed format, ensuring compatibility with as many desktop operating systems and mobile devices as possible.

The reasoning for that is easy to figure out from the game's name: this machine will have 40 paylines for players to win on, way up from the five in the original (and double the 20 in the other new edition that the company is also working on).
