Although Amazon deals in numerous products and has set foot in multiple industries, its core business model is based on an ecommerce market platform. Thus to completely understand the massive business model of this tech giant, it is crucial first to take a look at the Amazon marketplace.

What Is Amazon Marketplace?

The Amazon marketplace is an online two-sided ecommerce platform where third-party sellers and Amazon sells products from various categories, including electronics, gaming products, apparel, home decor, B2B business products, garden products, etc. The marketplace provides a platform for buyers and third-party sellers to interact and trade.

One of the major resources is its warehouses and fulfilment centres used for packaging, shipment, and delivery of products.

Fulfilment By Amazon (FBA) where Amazon stores, packs and ships the product through its fulfilment centres

The Amazon marketplace has multiple revenue sources such as:

Dynamic pricing: Amazon changes the prices of various products on the marketplace about 2.5 million times a day. Thus, an average product listed on Amazon would change price every 10 minutes! The dynamic pricing allows the company to keep its prices competitive and has even helped Amazon boost profits by 25% on an average. The real-time pricing considers data from various sources like customer activity, the available inventory of a product, order history, preferences set for a product, expected margin on the product, and more.

The ruling struck down a 1992 federal law that had prohibited most states from authorizing sports betting, though some have been operating sports betting throughout that period.

What's more, if California state authorities decide to change the law, they
