SAN FRANCISCO - The defeat of two propositions in California, according to a call by The Associated Press, keeps the largest market in America closed to legal sports betting.

It was opposed by operators of card rooms, who worried about a provision allowing individuals to bring civil lawsuits against the card clubs over disputes in state gaming law.

The Supreme Court overturned a federal ban on sports wagering in 2018. The proposition was opposed by Native American tribes who feared the measure would cut them out of a booming gambling market.

With a history, with the various factions supporting and opposing Proposition 26 and Proposition 27 spending roughly $450 million.

Spending tailed off, and executives of the top sports books signaled that legalization would likely have to wait until 2024.

Sharp bettors will look at these lines as early as possible and try to take advantage of the points or odds.
