Under the rules, an online game is defined as any game played via the internet where a player "makes a deposit with the expectation of earning winnings" and the player must be at least 18 years old.

The amendments note that any online game offered must not be in violation of any existing laws, such as state-wide gambling bans.

Self-regulatory bodies for online gambling in India

Rather than establishing a government regulator, the amendments would allow for the creation of "self-regulatory bodies", made up of online gaming businesses, which would create rules for online gambling.

They should also require members to verify their users, conduct know-your-customer checks, implement a complaints process and have a contact address in India.

If necessary, it could then suspend the registration of such a body.

Last year, MP Sushil Kumar Modi called on the government to create a comprehensive framework of regulation for online gaming, expressing his concerns for its rise in popularity in the country.

In June, India announced a crackdown on betting ads from operators based abroad.

What is the Amazon Influencer Program?

Influencer content will always have the name of the program (Amazon Influencer).

No. Influencers are able to independently determine whether to recommend a product. Amazon does not modify or edit content, as long as they comply with our posting guidelines.

Where does this content come from?

Click on the Influencer's name provided with their content and you will be taken to their profile where they have a bio and a link to their influencer storefront where you can see more content from that influencer.

Are Influencers expected to write only positive reviews?

We don't expect that Influencers/Onsite Associates will write only positive things. We expect that they'll help customers to discover/research products, through critiquing them as well. If an Influencer has a negative comment about a product, it will have no impact on how Amazon shows or promotes that product.

Influencers need to comply with our community guidelines.

Content creators participating in the Amazon Influencer Program earn affiliate commissions from Amazon for qualifying purchases.
