1. Promote Your Redbubble Store with Social Media Marketing

6. Create Trending Designs

The secret to selling tees on Redbubble (or anywhere, for that matter) is to create designs that people will actually want to buy. Do your research to see what's trending and focus on creating exciting shirt designs that are sure to appeal to a wide range of customers. When you put a lot of thought and creativity into your work, it shows in the final product and people are more likely to buy it.

Redbubble suggests loading a new design every month to keep traffic coming to your store. That's because taking the time to come up with something fresh once a month will help keep your shop looking active and interesting. It also gives customers more incentive to check back regularly for new designs.

When uploading your digital art to your Redbubble account, it's essential to use the proper file format. For instance, export your design with a transparent background unless you are printing an all-over pattern. For products like t-shirts and hoodies, use a PNG or PDF file with high resolution (300 DPI). Also, ensure that all your designs are created in CMYK color, so there aren't any unexpected color changes when you print.

You may get discouraged if you don't have traffic from Redbubble customers at first, as it may take a little bit of time to get established and start getting Redbubble pay. The first few months will probably be very slow-so, don't give up and keep posting your creations. Instead, give yourself around six months to learn how to use Redbubble, promote your products and grow.
